In the Rev. GEIFFITH JOHN'S letter published in yesterday's issue, it is stated that the foreigners at Hankow and Wuchang owe there would in all probability have been an outbreak in those cities, that indeed were the foreign force removed now there would be an outbreak within a week. The justification of the gunboat policy has been amply demonstrated during the present troubles. Had that policy been vigorously kept up all along it is possible the troubles which now threaten to involve China in hostilities with guarantee for the security of foreigners in do active police duty. We recently publishprompt satisfaction for an outrage on a British merchant at Hankow thirty years ago. The incident was adduced by a Shanghai correspondent of the Times as "a curiously satisfactory and harmless result of the old "energetic, so-called gunboat policy." It was shortly after the opening of Hankow the people were hostile, ignorant of foreigners and their ways, while crowds of raw levies from Hunan were successively passing through the city en route to the siege of Nanking that was then in progress. As consequence, foreigners scarcely ever millested, sometimes slightly-i.e., wit stones and brickbats only-sometimes seriously, with stabs from spear points. These outrages culminated one day in the stunning of an Englishman, Mr. LITTLE, by a blow on the skull with a heavy carrying bamboo and the conveying him away while insensible on board the boat in which these "braves' were making their way down the river. Mr LITTLE fortunately came to on board, slipped his bonds, jumped into the river, struggled ashore and escaped. He stated his case Chinese Admiral for the punishment of the offenders, but as these were not satisfactorily the war junk, ran the gauntlet of sixteen

The report spread among the Chinese that the offending soldiers had been bound on board and burned alive (which of course was untrue) and from that day forth all outrages ceased. The gunbeat policy was effective and at the on Wednesday, and anchored to day at Penang, and therefore I kept awake most of the time. behaved to her and how false he was when he same time the kindest to the Chinese Government. The prompt burning of a few war junks or the destruction of a yamen in default of the punishment by the Chinese authorities of the parties responsible for here yesterday morning, was detained in Saigon outrages strikes home at once and prevents a repetition of the offences, whereas when the matter is referred to Peking and drags on a weary course of years before a settlement is arrived at the lawless characters amongst the population are encouraged to think that they can commit outrages with impunity, especially when they have reason to believe that the local officials secretly sympathise with them. It would not be desirable now to break off with the policy of centralisation,

Had the search been a thorough as was at first proposed, the ship would have been delayed about three times the period she was, but no opium being found they contented themselves with a less rigorous overhauling.

An editorial in the Hu-pao, referring to the shaky state of China's finances and export trade, says that it is no wonder they are bad, when her principal traffic is in opium and the Manila Lottery, which is gradually drawing away the wealth of the country. As in Western lands, so it is in Amoya matter i great coocern, a most sucred duty on the part of the nearest relations, to be present when a beloved and respected kinsman breathes his last. Vives, sons, daughters, grandchildren, brothers and sisters should not be absent at a death-bed Neither are daughters-in-law allowed to stay away, as, in virtue of an established social law. any married woman has to behave in every respect towards her parents-in-law as if they were the very authors of her being. In order to enable the relatives to be present in good time, they are, when the sick man is had caough to cause the worst to be feared as froquently as possible informed of his condition. I'hose who live far off do not even shun difficult journeys for the sake of exchanging a parting word with the beloved senior and receiving his last instructions. It is, indeed, generally in presence of the whole of the nearest kindred that last dispositions are made, or, as Amov people call it, "orders are given about things to come," home hu-ho-su; they may, of course, be taken down on paper as they come from the lips of the dying man, but written wills made beforeand waile the testator is still hale and healthy are, in Fuhkien, quite exceptional. This is the reason why, if there is something to be bequeath-

Even before matters take this fital turn, he is transported to a couch of three boards supported by a couple of treatles or benches and covered with the same mat on which he was lying sick; sometimes, however, they give him a new mat, if there is one at hand. This peculiar death bed goes by the name of taxi-ta one "water-bad," because the moribund is to ba washed on it. In many cases, especially with the rich, it is screened from view by means of a white sheet hanging down from the ceiling at a distance of a few feet-obviously a very Li-ki we read: "Tsang-tsse (a disciple of Confacius) said: Because the ornaments are not Chung Liang-tese said: They curtain the main apartment off because husbands and wives are in confusion at that time; but after the slighter dressing they take the curtain way." As a rule, the water-bed is put up in the principal apartment, or the so-called things. Any one who has been in a Chinese dwelling is sure to remember that central part of it, just behind the main entrance, sometimes separated from this by an inner court-yard. Guests are place for sacrificing to the tutelar divinities of the house and to the family-manes, who, in the shape of images and vertical wooden tablets, occupy there an altar erected in the rear against the wall, just opposite the main door. We shall call that apartment the hall. As it is a domestic temple in the true sense of the word, it bears a close resemblance to the atrium of the aucient Romans, which also contained that lararium or altar for the guardian. divinities of the home.

Before the dying man is removed to the hall. the said altar, together with the objects of worship, is taken to another apartment, it being considered inconsistent with the respect due to the gods and manes to allow them to have the shooking and unpleasant speciacle of death before their eyes.
